FIN FRAUD?

That fish on your plate might not be what it claims, study finds

Chicago Tribune

Chicago diners who think they are eating red snapper may actually be munching on gold-banded jobfish.

Those who order Alaskan cod may really be tucking into a threadfin slickhead. And fans of yellowtail could just be getting a fish tale.

These are some of the findings of a Chicago fish fraud investigation released Thursday by conservancy group Oceana.

After its troubling seafood fraud investigations in East and West Coast cities in the past two years, the group expanded its testing to other cities, including Chicago. Thirty of 93 fish samples taken from Chicago restaurants, retail chains and sushi bars were mislabeled, mirroring percentages found in other cities.

Eight of nine Chicago red snapper samples tested by Oceana turned out to be different fish, the report said. And none of the three yellowtail samples tested actually was yellowtail. Single samples sold as corvina, jack, mackerel and even perch didn't match those descriptions, according to Oceana's DNA tests.

The ocean conservancy organization does not list the names of the restaurants or stores where it bought the fish because "we didn't know where along the supply chain the mislabeling first occurred," said Beth Lowell, Oceana's seafood fraud campaign director.

Improperly labeled fish can cost consumers financially, but these substitutions can have health consequences. As in many cities, Chicago purveyors were found marketing white tuna that actually escolar, which is cheaper but can cause severe digestive problems.

On a reassuring note for local fish fans, every one of the 22 salmon samples Oceana tested in the area checked out just fine. Ditto for the seven halibut and seven grouper samples—a surprise, Oceana noted, because grouper frequently has been found mislabeled elsewhere.

Among the places where testers bought the samples, sushi bars fared the worst, with 6.4 percent (or 14 out of 22) of the samples coming back as erroneously labeled.

In contrast, 20 percent of fish sold at other types of restaurants and 24 percent of the seafood sold at grocery stores was mislabeled.

Oceana said it focused mainly on large grocery chains.

Consumers have a few ways to minimize their risk of buying mislabeled fish.

Lowell they can protect themselves by patronizing businesses that make an effort to source sustainable fish, are willing to answer lots of questions about the product, and can show you the whole fish even if you are only going to buy a fillet.

What you bought	What it might have been
Chilean sea bass	Atlantic toothfish
Alaskan/ Pacific cod	Pangasius (Asian "catfish"), Atlantic cod, threadfin slickhead, tilapia
Atlantic cod	Pacific cod, white hake
Grouper	Pangasius, king mackerel, whitefin weakfish

Alaskan/ Pacific halibut	Atlantic halibut, blue-line filefish
Salmon (wild, king and sockeye)	Farmed Atlantic salmon
Sea bass	Antarctic toothfish, Patagonian toothfish
Snapper	Gilthead sea bream, madai, tilapia, Pacific ocean perch, widow rockfish, yellow rockfish
Lemon sole	Blackback flounder, summer flounder, flathead and yellowfin sole
White tuna	Escolar

Still making black history

Zach Stafford

redeye@tribune.com
@zachstafford

The Super Bowl, the Grammys, Valentine's Day, the Oscars. Yep, February is a busy month, but for me it's most notable as Black History Month. With only a week left, this seems to be the perfect time to reflect on some highlights—or lowlights?—from 2013. Here are three stories that caught my eye.

Chicken and waffles became chips

Yes, it's true: You can now eat the famous dish as a Lay's potato chip—at least for now. The Do Us a Flavor contest pits the soul food staple against Sracha and Cheesy Garlic Bread flavors in a battle to determine which flavor will remain on store shelves.

I picked up my first bag during a road trip with friends and experienced three different emotions: joy, awe and surprise. I was happy due to the fact they even existed. In awe because they were so good. And surprised that they came out during Black History Month.

No, I don't think there is some racist agenda afoot, but the timing could have been better. Funny/awkward, right?

Slavery became illegal

Speaking of racism ... February 2013 forever will be marked as the month slavery finally became fully illegal in America. I know what you're thinking: Wait, didn't that happen already? Apparently not.

In the late 1800s, when the 13th Amendment was being ratified by all the states, four initially chose to opt out, and most of these four eventually joined the crowd and ratified the amendment in their respective states. Mississippi got around to it in 1995, MSNBC reports, but never made it officially official by sending the ratification to the Office of the Federal Register.

According to MSNBC, it took a couple of curious professors and the movie "Lincoln" for anyone to notice the oversight.

After Mississippi Secretary of State Delbert Hosemann corrected the mistake, he told MSNBC, "It was long overdue." For all you not good at math and want to know how "overdue" Mississippi was ... well, the answer is 148 years.

And we thought marriage equality was taking too long. Geez.

Beyonce used her superpowers

In 2012, when we were all worried that the end of the Mayan calendar meant the end of the world, I believe we misunderstood. It wasn't marking the end of the world, but rather the beginning of a new one: Bey-world.

Between her world tour, inauguration performance and new documentary, she really is everywhere. Her performance at the Super Bowl halftime show was SO anticipated that most people began referring to the event as the Beyonce Bowl, ignoring football entirely.

After her performance, Beyonce used her superpowers for the first time in such a public venue and literally shut the place down—lights off for almost an hour.

After this historic event, all of us common folks had to take a moment and again ask ourselves: Who runs the world? And the answer, at least for 2013, is Beyonce, a fierce black woman.

Happy Black History Month.

Peterson sentenced

Former cop whose case inspired Lifetime movie gets 38 years for murder

Drew Peterson*Reuters

CHICAGO A judge on Thursday sentenced former Chicago-area police officer Drew Peterson to 38 years in prison for the murder of his third wife, whose death initially seemed accidental until Peterson's fourth wife disappeared.

Will County Judge Edward Burmila sentenced Peterson after rejecting a plea for a retrial in the death of Kathleen Savio. He had faced a maximum of 60 years in prison.

The sentence was handed down after Peterson, who did not testify at this trial, made an emotional appeal to the judge, at times appearing to choke up.

Peterson began by telling the judge, "Good day, my name is Drew Peterson. I hope I don't aggravate the situation here, but I have a lot of things to be said." Then he screamed, "I did not kill Kathleen!"

"Yes, you did," a woman said.

"Ma'am, I'd like you to leave the courtroom," Burmila said. "And Mr. Peterson, don't make any outbursts that are designed to aggravate people."

"I'm sorry, your honor. I must have been woozy," Peterson said.

Peterson was convicted in September of killing Savio in 2004 during a contentious divorce and then trying to make her death look like an accident. Savio was found dead in a bathtub, and her death was at first ruled accidental.

Suspicions were raised when Peterson's fourth wife, Stacy Peterson, disappeared in 2007.

After the sentencing, the former police officer's defense team told reporters they would appeal the conviction, saying the trial had been riddled with problems.

"They changed the rules to convict him, they changed the evidence," attorney Steve Greenberg said. "They changed everything."

The Illinois state Legislature passed a law, dubbed "Drew's law," in response to the case, loosening requirements for circumstantial evidence.

Peterson, who was a police sergeant in Bolingbrook, had waged a high-profile public relations campaign asserting his innocence both in the death of Savio and the disappearance of Stacy Peterson, who is presumed dead. He is the only suspect in her disappearance.

CTA unveils Red Line project plan

By Tracy Swartz*REDEYE

Red Line trains will run on Green Line tracks and passengers will be able to ride for free at the Garfield Green Line station, according to plans the CTA unveiled Thursday for its Red Line south shutdown.

The plans are in preparation for one of the biggest reconstruction projects in CTA history.

As the CTA overhauls track, it will close nine Red Line stations from Cermak-Chinatown to 95th Street from May 19-Oct. 19. The agency said it will run free shuttle buses to the Garfield Green Line stop from the 95th, 87th, 79th and 69th Street Red Line stations.

CTA spokesman Brian Steele called the shuttles "load and go." He said the CTA is testing how long it will take to ferry riders from these shuttered stations to the Garfield Green Line stop.

South of Roosevelt, the Red Line will be rerouted to elevated Green Line tracks and run to the Ashland/63rd Street Green Line station in West Englewood.

There will be regular Green Line service along Green Line tracks to the Cottage Grove station in Woodlawn, though Green Line frequency will increase during off-peak hours.

During the project, riders can enter the CTA for free at the Garfield Green Line, which will see its daily ridership grow from 1,300 riders to 13,000 riders, the CTA said. Extra entrances and turnstiles are being added to the station to improve the flow of traffic. The agency also is offering a 50-cent discount on bus rides along routes south of 63rd Street.

Commutes on the Red Line will be cut by 20 minutes when the project is complete, the CTA said.

The CTA created a Twitter account, @redlinesouth, to provide updates to the project.

Storm pounds Plains states

1 A major winter storm pounded the Great Plains on Thursday, creating hazardous travel that resulted in at least one death, closing schools, scuttling air travel and cutting off power to some communities. Missouri Gov. Jay Nixon declared a state of emergency because of hazardous travel and possible power outages. Kansas Gov. Sam Brownback ordered state offices closed because of the storm. AP/WIDEWORLD

Birthday strippers for 16-year-old?

4 An upstate New York mother is accused of hiring strippers for her son's 16th birthday party late last year, according to the Saratoga County District Attorney. She is charged with five counts of endangering the welfare of a child.

Five people killed in Georgia jet crash

Twitter under hack attack

6 NEW YORK Twitter has a problem: While the social network is trying to woo brands and advertising money to its platform, companies' Twitter accounts keep getting hacked.

Burger King and Jeep were the latest Twitter hacking victims. The burger chain's Twitter account was taken over by hackers Monday, who used the account to tweet that the company had been purchased by rival McDonald's. The very next day, Jeep's Twitter account was compromised as well.

And they're far from the first brands to suffer from compromised accounts.

Fox News' Twitter account was broken into in July 2011, and the account—followed by more than 2 million people—tweeted that President Obama had been assassinated. NBC News' account also was compromised two months later, falsely tweeting that a plane had crashed into Manhattan's Ground Zero.

Twitter's own systems were hacked earlier this month, with attackers gaining access to usernames as well as encrypted and randomized passwords for about 250,000 users.

The damage from hacking can be serious, albeit temporary. Compromised accounts are typically recoverable within a few hours.

So far, no major brands have abandoned Twitter because of hacking issues. It would be hard for brands to ignore Twitter, because it's a space full of potential customers, according to Mike Santoro, president of Walker Sands, a PR and social media firm.

"For now, Twitter represents more reward than risk," Santoro said.

But brands are likely to cut down on the slack they give Twitter.

Twitter unveiled a tool Wednesday that lets companies use third-party ad platforms to launch marketing campaigns. Once they're paying big money for Twitter's services, companies likely will be less forgiving.

"It's one thing when Twitter is free for brands," brand strategist Adam Hanft said. "It's another when there's an advertising contract in place, and hacking can disrupt the service a brand has paid for."

3 killed in Vegas Strip shooting, crash

8 LAS VEGAS Three people were killed and at least four others were hurt in a car-to-car shooting and crash early Thursday on the Las Vegas Strip, police said.

A person in a black Range Rover Sport opened fire on a Maserati about 4:20 a.m. as the cars traveled north in front of the Strip's Bellagio and Bally's casinos, said officer Jose Hernandez, a police spokesman.

The Range Rover fled the scene.

The driver of the Maserati lost control of the car and crashed into a taxi, which burst into flames. The Maserati, which had a passenger, struck another four cars, he said.

The drivers of the Maserati and the taxi were killed, as was a passenger in the taxi. The Maserati passenger and three others were taken to a hospital.

There was no known motive for the shooting, Hernandez said. The Strip was partly shut down after the shooting.

"The Strip is a busy place," he said. "It's truly a 24-hour town, and that means we'll get help with investigating this incident."

Credit error? Don't panic!

YOUNG MONEY

Megan Crepeau

 @mcrepeau

If the government's numbers are correct, 26 percent of you really should be spending some quality time with the copy machine soon.

That's the percentage of people who have possible errors on their credit reports, according to a Federal Trade Commission study. So go pull your credit report (you can get it three times a year for free at annualcreditreport.com) and give it a read. Don't worry, I'll wait.

All set? Okay. There are three common errors to look out for: late accounts that actually were paid on time, accounts that are not yours, postal service for this one. First, you can make photocopies of all the documents you send, for interested parties and to keep in your files. Also, you can request confirmation that your packet actually has been received, so if anyone tries to pretend it got lost in the mail, you don't have to start over.

Okay, about those documents. Print out your credit report, circle or highlight the segments you believe are in error, and write a letter explaining, in specific, formal language, what is wrong. Dig up some evidence supporting your claim—a statement showing your on-time credit card payment, for example, or bank documents showing that you never opened an account in Miami. Clip it all together and head to the nearest photocopier.

Make four copies of this giant packet: one for you, one for the credit bureau, one for the agency that filed the allegedly false report, and another one for you. You can't be too careful.

Head to the mail-sending agency of your choice and send those babies off—the addresses should be available on your credit report; if not, give the credit bureau a call. Be sure to request some form of delivery confirmation. Yes, you will have to pay for it.

Once the credit bureau receives your report, it has 30 days to investigate and respond. It will contact the lender in question, which will also run its own investigation. If you feel like you're not getting anywhere, or they aren't taking you seriously, you can go to the feds—i.e., the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau. And, hey, it couldn't hurt to cross your fingers.

Network on your network

CareerBuilder

Attending networking events can be very beneficial to your job search—that is, if you actually make connections and follow up with them afterwards. But with a bunch of business cards stuffed into your pocket or purse, you're almost guaranteed to lose a few before you even get home. Avoid missing out on a potential job lead by using a phone app that lets you capture someone's information easily. Apps such as Business Card Reader and CardMunch take a snapshot of a business card, transcribe the information and add it to your address book. The Bump app lets you bump phones with someone else and share contact information between phones. Now you really don't have an excuse to skip out on a coffee meeting with that recruiter you just met.

For the networking you do online, your phone allows you to make updates and connections in real time. Just met someone at a party who works at a company you'd like to join? Find out if she has a professional profile on a social network. Just got a promotion? Update your social profiles on the train ride home from work. Reading an article about a new technology being embraced by those in your field? Post commentary about it to that Facebook group you joined, to show that you're well-versed on industry trends.

These are just a few examples of how your phone can be an asset in your job search. While it won't be the only tool you use—computers are still necessary and in-person interactions are still crucial—it can make your search more efficient, thorough and convenient.

and incorrect numbers (for example, if the report says your credit limit is lower than it really is).

If you find something fishy-looking, don't freak out. It's not the end of the world (probably), it's just a lot of bureaucracy to wade through. With a little luck, you'll come out of this with a squeaky-clean credit profile.

First off: Though you also can submit complaints over the phone and online, the FTC recommends disputing credit errors through the mail. Old-school, I know. But there are good reasons to rely on the

Athletes struggle to draw the line between safety and their livelihoods

By Leonor Vivanco | REDEYE

Hard hits make sports fans gasp and flinch, but they're far tougher on the players.

In April, fans watched in shock as Blackhawks forward Marian Hossa was knocked off his feet, strapped to a stretcher, carted off the ice and taken to the emergency room during the playoffs.

On Tuesday, the Hawks felt déjà vu as Hossa left the ice after another head injury. This time, a Vancouver player leveled him with a forearm to the back of the head.

Such forceful hits sidelined other Chicago athletes last year with concussions. Bears quarterback Jay Cutler had to leave a game in November with a concussion, and had to sit out the next game. Head injuries also forced Blackhawks captain Jonathan Toews to miss two months of last season and Bears receiver Earl Bennett to sit out two games.

With as many as 3.8 million sports- and recreation-related concussions reported annually in the U.S. by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, it's no wonder so much attention has been paid to head injuries.

Head trauma especially has become top of mind in football and hockey; experts say those sports carry the highest risk of concussions.

Pushing the issue beyond sports venues is recent medical research on brain trauma, numerous concussion-related lawsuits against the NFL, and comments made by President Obama that he'd

"They were long days. I was so tired. I'd wake up and fall asleep again. All of a sudden I'd realize it was nighttime and I wasn't hungry because I'd feel sick. I'd try to open the window and the light hits you and you realize it's not good."

—Marian Hossa, to the Tribune, on the aftermath of the head injury he suffered in April 2012

Blackhawks forward Marian Hossa (left) was hospitalized last year after absorbing this hit to the head by Phoenix's Raffi Torres. Hossa also was hit in the head by Vancouver's Jannik Hansen on Tuesday. REUTERS have to think "long and hard" before letting his son—if he had one—play football.

"The concussion is a dangerous thing," Hossa said last week. He wasn't cleared by doctors to play until mid-November.

"We have to be smart," he said. "We have to be more—how would I describe it?—respectful to each other on the ice, don't go crazy in terms of hits."

Case in point: the hit Hossa absorbed by Vancouver's Jannik Hansen on Tuesday. The Hawks forward's back was turned when Hansen floored him. Hossa practiced Thursday and may play Friday against San Jose, the Tribune reported.

Concussion symptoms include headaches, dizziness and loss of consciousness. The signs can be subtle, immediate or delayed and last for days or months. Repetitive head trauma, which could be concussions or subconcussive blows, can lead to the degenerative brain disease known as chronic traumatic encephalopathy, or CTE. Experts have linked CTE to memory loss, depression and dementia.

"CTE is important and we need to keep doing research and figure that out. We still have to take concussions themselves seriously because they're potentially devastating," said Dr. Jeff Mjaanes, director of the Chicago Sports Concussion Clinic at Rush University Medical Center.

There definitely are more cases of concussions now than in past years, he said, due to a combination of possible factors. Among them could be that more are being diagnosed, sports collisions are more forceful, and more people are aware of concussions.

But the number of reported CTE cases is small when compared with the millions who play contact sports, Mjaanes said.

What's become alarming is that athletes who have committed suicide were later found to have had the brain disease.

Former Bears player Dave Duerson killed himself two years ago this month by shooting himself in the chest. He left a note requesting that his brain be donated for research, and his brain tissue showed evidence of CTE. In May 2012, former San Diego Chargers linebacker Junior Seau died of a self-inflicted gunshot wound to the chest. His brain tissue also had CTE.

Medical researchers still are looking for connections, such as a genetic predisposition to CTE.

"We have to keep doing research in the area, find out which players are at risk and better ways to detect this while people are still alive rather than from an autopsy," Mjaanes said.

A small preliminary UCLA study published last month in the American Journal of Geriatric Psychiatry showed brain scans of five living retired football players who had suffered concussions. Researchers detected traces of the abnormal protein called tau, which is known to be a sign of CTE.

The latest development begs the question: What would athletes do if research could show whether they were developing CTE?

"I would want to know so you can plan for the future and get the help that you need to make sure you stay on top of things," Bennett said earlier this month at an unrelated event at the Boys & Girls Club in Logan Square. "Of course it would make you re-evaluate if you wanted to continue to play, because that's your livelihood, and I have children who I want to watch grow up. It would definitely put things in perspective."

This past NFL season, 170 players were listed on injury reports with a concussion or head injury, according to Frontline and ESPN Concussion Watch. And at least a handful of hockey players reportedly have sustained a concussion or head injury, or showed concussion-like symptoms one month into the 2013 NHL season.

Even after getting a concussion, Hossa said last week he doesn't let fear of another injury get to him.

"I cannot be worried because otherwise I wouldn't be playing my game right," he said.

Whether they're driven by the fear of losing their job, passion for the game or some combination of the two, many players choose to accept the risks of the sport.

"This is what we want to do. That is the thing we know how to do it and we were dreaming to do when we were young kids," Hossa said.

"Everybody wants to do what they're best in and this is what we're best in and it's worth it. But also we want to get rid of those nasty plays."

LIVVAVANCO@TRIBUNE.COM | @LIVVAVANCO

WHAT'S ON THEIR MINDS?

When dealing with athletes' pride, concussions become an even thornier issue. Here's what several Chicago athletes had to say about head injuries.

"Yeah, [I would lie to cover up a concussion]. There's a point in every game when you get hit and you're a little woozy. Not every game, but mostly every game you hit someone and you're like, 'Whoa, that was a good one.' I don't know how you can lie these days with all the crap they have to see who's concussed and who's not."

—Brian Urlacher, to reporters in November 2012

"... you hate to admit it to yourself. You see so many guys around the league dealing with [concussions] right now, and you don't want to be one of those guys. It took some time to kind of come to grips with that and realize I had to rest and had to try to get better."

—Jonathan Toews, to the Chicago Sun-Times, after suffering a concussion in 2012

"Back then, it was just tape an aspirin to your helmet and you go back in. I've worked with some neurosurgeons and it's a very serious thing, man. My memory's pretty much gone. There are a lot of times when I walk into a room and forget why I walked in there."

1	What birthday greeting will the Bulls have for Michael Jordan in Charlotte on Friday?	Happy 1st 50th birthday!	They'll have Karla Knafel jump out of a moldy cake.	Bourbon and hookers. Like Michael, an oldie but a goodie.	Happy birthday. Tough being an owner.	@JBDstarwars A 23-point blowout for the Bulls with 50 rebounds.
2	How would you rate the Blackhawks' record point streak?	Since they are sharing with the '06-'07 Ducks, they're at Level Skinny Tie.	I wish had more hands so I could give that record four thumbs up! It's a celebration, mitches!	Ask me in early July when I'm attending a parade.	Amazing, fun, enticing.	@BaconSports Kate Uptonesque.
3	How should the Hawks retaliate for Vancouver's hit on Marian Hossa?	Launch a nationwide anti-Vancouver campaign. In Canada, there's no "ohhhh" without "you."	Retaliate? They should Canuck them up.	Send an empty box to each Vancouver player with a note: "Enclosed are all your Stanley Cups."	By winning the Stanley Cup.	@sofia_trani Kane should hook one of them up with Taylor Swift.
4	Now that Adam Dunn is starring in a movie...	... Rotten Tomatoes will designate it a hit.	... it's only a matter of time before he and Melia World Peace remake "Lethal Weapon."	... he can win a Golden Sombbrero for Best Strikeout Artist in a Featured Role.	... he's given hope to big donkeys everywhere.	@sheezak ... maybe the Cubs will win a World Series. Who am I kidding? No they won't.
5	Give Danica Patrick some advice for the Daytona 500.	Lap up the attention. "How do you like me from behind?"	This is one time you really don't want to do your makeup in the car. (Send your angry tweets to @redyechicago.)	After you don't win, continue to make sexually suggestive commercials.	Map the destination on GPS, get in the left lane and go. Female drivers, you know.	@DaSignGod You want advice, Danica? Don't make any more GoDaddy commercials!

No stop sign for Danica

Her high-profile romance is along for the ride

By Ryan Smith | FOR REDEYE

Perhaps the most impressive thing about Danica Patrick's history-making win of the pole at the Daytona 500 is that she did so while dealing with a new high-profile romance.

Before Sunday's qualifying race, most headlines about the 30-year-old Roscoe, Ill., native revolved around her relationship with her new boyfriend, fellow NASCAR driver Ricky Stenhouse Jr. If Patrick takes the checkered flag at Daytona, she'll be on the short list of athletes who have succeeded while in a much-buzzed-about coupling. Here are others who weren't so lucky.

Kris Humphries

The late-blooming power forward's tumultuous marriage with reality star Kim Kardashian lasted about as long as the All-Star break, but it certainly didn't help the New Jersey Nets' (now Brooklyn Nets) fortunes. During the 2011-

12 season, the team went 22-44 and finished last in the Atlantic Division. This year, the Kardashian-less Humphries' personal stats are down but his team is second in the standings.

Tony Romo

It used to be a running joke that Jessica Simpson was something of a bad-luck charm for the Dallas quarterback. Nearly every time a TV broadcast would show the singer in the stands wearing her pink Romo jersey, something would inevitably go wrong for America's team. The worst was a game in 2007 in which Romo turned the ball over five times in a 10-6 loss to Philadelphia, prompting announcer Joe Buck to observe: "It's never easy to play in front of your girlfriend."

Manti in the spotlight

The Bears will not pretend Manti Te'o doesn't exist. Without mentioning his name, Bears general manager Phil Emery said the team plans to meet with the former Notre Dame linebacker and ask him about the bizarre fake girlfriend hoax. The Bears and other teams will speak with him for the first time this week at the NFL scouting combine.

DAYTONA 500

Jay Cutler

The Bears QB's sometimes-rocky relationship with Kristin Cavallari seems to have brought good things during the first half of the regular season over the past two years. But both times the Bears finished the season with bad juju and narrowly missed the playoffs. Perhaps it's time Jay opted for a lesser-known cast member of "The Hills." Whitney Port, anyone?

Matt Kemp

The L.A. Dodgers slugger struggled during the second half of the 2010 season while dating pop star Rihanna and ended up with a .248 batting average. The next year a newly single Kemp emerged as one of the best hitters in baseball. Perhaps Rihanna should have advised the outfielder to Just Shut Up And Drive The Ball To Right Field?

Tom Brady

It's not as if Tom Terrific has been a complete failure since he hooked up with supermodel Gisele Bündchen at the end of 2006. Still, it's worth noting that all three of Brady's Super Bowl wins with New England have come pre-Gisele.

I asked all my fellow rednecks to please not judge me by the outfit I will be wearing for the May issue of GQ. ... I think I was the most out of my element, taking off the cowboy boots and trading them Wranglers for skinny jeans, but it was fun."

SPECULATING Seth

WHAT SHOULD WE EXPECT FROM SETH MACFARLANE'S DEBUT AS OSCAR HOST?

By Matt Pairs | REDEYE

A year after Billy Crystal helmed the Oscars for approximately the 40 millionth time, hosting duties fall to "Family Guy" creator Seth MacFarlane, who's directed a grand total of one movie and had a minor role alongside Dwayne Johnson (and Crystal) in "Tooth Fairy."

Of course, Crystal's shtick was shockingly stale at the 2012 Academy Awards, and the sometimes-hilarious MacFarlane's one movie happens to be "Ted," the highest-grossing R-rated comedy of all time. Considering MacFarlane's limited movie history and longer record of controversy—he did it again in January by making a Hitler joke while helping Emma Stone announce the Oscar nominees—it's worth wondering what this talented showman and frequent button-pusher will bring to Hollywood's Super Bowl. Read on for some informed speculation.

Condescension

During the nominations special, MacFarlane mocked nominees in the adapted screenplay category, saying they copied and pasted from Microsoft Word to script-writing program Final Draft. He said of the directorial nominees, "These are the five people who are the very best at sitting in a chair and watching other people make a movie," a weird joke for a new director to make. His smug attitude could lead the reported atheist to bash supporters of the religious-themed "Life of Pi." Another possibility: Noting that the duck named James Franco in "Ted" could do a better job of hosting the Oscars than the real James Franco.

Randomness

MacFarlane's built his comic style/TV empire on non sequiturs, which could result in a monologue that jumps all over the place, from Quvenzhané Wallis of "Beasts of the Southern Wild" to an impression of William Wallace in the 1996

MACFARLANE'S TWITTER HINTS

What does Seth MacFarlane's Twitter account tell us about how he'll host the Oscars?

MacFarlane has a promise to viewers who'll tune in Sunday to see him host the Academy Awards: Despite the occasionally crude humor he displays on his show "Family Guy," he won't be telling cheap penis jokes on the Oscars.

Actually, he put it this way on Twitter: "My promise for the Oscars: no cheap wiener jokes. Only expensive wiener jokes." Here are more of his Oscar-related tweets.

THE WRAP

"This year's Oscars will be like nothing you can imagine. Unless you can imagine 3 hours of, like, people getting awards and stuff."

"My Zero Dark 30 torture scenario: put me in a tiny room with just a beet salad, Atlas Shrugged, wet socks, and a Wall Street Journal."

"Lotta flap over that Adolf joke. Look, Amour was a great film, so how about this: Austria, we'll give you the Oscar if you take back Arnold."

"Press gave me [bleep] for not wearing a tie to the nominations. I'm also busted for skipping lacrosse and mouthing off to the headmaster."

"Liked 'Les Miz' (the play) but wished they were all way bigger and screaming right in my face. Is there a current film I might enjoy?"

BORED WITH THE OSCARS?

Can host Seth MacFarlane save the Oscars? It's highly unlikely, even if he does a terrific job Sunday. Neither can the ceremony's producers, Craig Zadan and Neil Meron, the award-winning team behind "Chicago," who claim they're filling the show with several "wow" moments. Sorry, guys, nothing will stop the boredom of an awards show that insists on handing out trophies in 24 categories, many about which viewers couldn't care less. (Sound Mixing! Yay!) The Grammys do it right by giving only 10 awards during the telecast and concentrating on live performances. From what we know about plans for this year's show, we offer the following best- and worst-case scenarios. LOS ANGELES TIMES

Show is broken up into 13 acts, each possessing what the producers call a "wow moment"

BEST CASE: Act 1's wow moment: Tina Fey and Amy Poehler join MacFarlane as co-hosts

WORST CASE: Producers define "wow moments" as surprise guest appearances from—OMG!—the original Broadway casts of "Hairspray" and "Footloose."

Opening monologue

BEST-CASE SCENARIO:

MacFarlane successfully negotiates a tricky tonal middle ground between snark and respect, delivering a broadly appealing sense of irreverence that includes him singing a genuinely funny parody of "Les Miserables."

WORST-CASE SCENARIO:

The Emmy mauler last year for MacFarlane's animated TV show "Family Guy" appealed to voters by saying, "Come on, you bloated, overprivileged Brentwood Jews, let us into your little club." We get 10 minutes of that kind of tone-deaf insider humor, culminating with a cameo from Stewie.

A tribute to film musicals of the last decade, including best picture nominee "Les Miz," 2002's best picture winner "Chicago" and 2006's "Dreamgirls"

BEST CASE: Anne Hathaway! Jennifer Hudson! Eddie Murphy! Razzle dazzle!

WORST CASE: An eight-minute interpretive dance number, culminating with Russell Crowe singing "And I Am Telling You I'm Not Going."

Twenty-two cameras, including an army of hand-held specialists

BEST CASE: There's one camera trained on Tommy Lee Jones' face for the entire ceremony.

WORST CASE: Hand-held cameramen were schooled by Lars von Trier. Nauseated home viewers turn off their TVs en masse.

Special salute to James Bond movies, celebrating the series' 50th anniversary

BEST CASE: The six men who have played 007—Sean Connery, George Lazenby, Roger Moore, Timothy Dalton, Pierce Brosnan and Daniel Craig—share the stage.

WORST CASE: Only Lazenby shows.

Barbra Streisand sings!

BEST CASE: She performs a moving tribute to her friend and frequent collaborator, composer Marvin Hamlisch. When she finishes, there's not a dry eye in the house.

WORST CASE: It's not a tribute to Hamlisch. It's a duet with... MacFarlane.

Mark Wahlberg reunites with the animated bear from "Ted" to present an award

BEST CASE: The movie's R-rated comic sensibility is toned down enough to translate to the broadcast's PG-13 standards.

WORST CASE: Thanks to network censors, we won't be able to hear half their routine.

Adele performs "Skyfall"

BEST CASE: It's just her and the piano. No needless distractions. No Bond girls shimmying in the background.

WORST CASE: It's just her and the piano—with Lazenby sprawled across the top of it.

Best picture "wow moment"

BEST CASE: "Ladies and gentlemen... Gene Hackman!"

WORST CASE: "Ladies and gentlemen, please welcome... the cast of 'Twilight!'"

The ceremony ends...

BEST CASE: ...with the wealth spread around, befitting a year with so many good movies.

WORST CASE: ...sometime Monday morning.

Best Picture winner, "Braveheart." Though in the floundering randomness department, it always will be hard to top 1995 host David Letterman's Uma/Oprah debacle.

Vocal tricks

There's no denying that MacFarlane's got a gift for voices and impressions (he was good on "Saturday Night Live," particularly as Olympic swimmer Ryan Lochte), and you don't get on the largest stage of your career just to leave your biggest trick up your sleeve. Jack Black commented that MacFarlane's voices could grow tiresome at the Oscars, so it's safe to say MacFarlane will do a bunch of voices and then make a crack about Jack Black's weight or something. MacFarlane, nominated for an Oscar this year for his theme song to "Ted," also has an impressive singing voice (he was nominated for a 2012 Grammy in the Traditional Pop Vocal Album category) and will almost certainly sing during the Oscars ceremony—a practice Crystal pretty much drove into the ground.

Controversy

Though he's spoken in favor of humanitarian causes including gay rights, MacFarlane also favors homophobic jokes—in addition to humor that seems to find fun in racism and anti-Semitism. Considering the multiple nominations for Quentin Tarantino's look at slavery, "Django Unchained," and the cliché stereotype about powerful Jewish people in Hollywood, this could get awkward and/or offensive.

Misogyny?

MacFarlane's writing doesn't exactly make great use of female characters, and we can only imagine what he'll have to say about the significant female roles in movies such as "Zero Dark Thirty," "Beasts of the Southern Wild" and "Amour." Hopefully whatever he says doesn't intersect with his fondness for fart jokes. MPAIG@TRIBUNE.COM | @MATTPAIG

BEST PICTURE

Majority: Initial expectations of a “Lincoln” win have given way to Affleck’s “Argo” taking back its frontrunner status.

Accurate? Yep, and while “Argo” is not my favorite of the noms (I prefer “Beasts of the Southern Wild” and “Zero Dark Thirty”), I’ll be glad to see Steven Spielberg’s overrated “Lincoln” lose.

Surprise: A presenter comments that the Academy probably didn’t understand “The Master,” and that’s why it was snubbed for Best Picture. The presenter gets in trouble; the Academy admits he/she is right.

BEST DIRECTOR

Majority: Most people say Spielberg, though it’s not a lock.

Accurate? I don’t think so. In a year when the category was very surprising, I’m thinking (hoping) the winner could be a surprise, too. Maybe the Academy, which clearly loves “Silver Linings Playbook,” goes with David O. Russell?

Surprise: I’d love if Benh Zeitlin, whom no one expected to be nominated for “Beasts of the Southern Wild,” shocked the world and showed that young filmmakers with original movies can win a category that doesn’t always favor that sort of thing.

SOME MILD AND WILD GUESSES ABOUT THIS YEAR’S OSCARS

FAST PAISED

Matt Pais

» mpais
@tribune.com
» @mattpais

For context about predictions of major entertainment events, Duff Goldman from “Ace of Cakes” correctly predicted the result of this year’s Super Bowl. NFL experts did not.

Likewise, making Oscar predictions can be a bit ridiculous, since usually the name of the game is predicting what everyone else predicts and going rogue on just a few. Thankfully, this year’s Oscar race is more interesting than usual. Several big categories (Best Director, Best Actress and Best Supporting Actor, in particular) are far from guaranteed, unlike the Best Supporting Actress category, which will (but shouldn’t) go to Anne Hathaway for “Les Miserables.”

So let’s take a look at the majority pick for the winner, my estimation of its accuracy and the surprises I’d welcome.

BEST ACTOR

Majority: Daniel Day-Lewis for “Lincoln”

Accurate? Yes.

Surprise: Day-Lewis acknowledges Joaquin Phoenix’s stand-out work in “The Master,” which will be forever chilling. People’s memories of Phoenix’s anti-Oscar comments won’t last past March.

BEST SUPPORTING ACTRESS

Majority: Anne Hathaway, “Les Miserables”

Accurate? 100 percent. This is a perfect example of buzz turning into certainty. Hathaway is pretty good in the role, but has a few over-acted moments. Like nearly all her performances, Hathaway hits it as hard as she can. But even for a character reaching an emotional peak, it’s too much.

Surprise: In the biggest Oscar shock of all time, Amy Adams (“The Master”) wins instead. Her speech is neither rambling nor annoying.

BEST SUPPORTING ACTOR

Majority: There isn’t one, which is awesome. All of the nominees have won before, which isn’t as awesome for those of us who like rooting for the underdog.

Accurate? Alan Arkin won’t win for “Argo” and I don’t think Robert De Niro should win for being good again in “Silver Linings Playbook” just because he’s spent so much of the last decade giving weak performances. I also prefer it doesn’t go to Tommy Lee Jones for “Lincoln.”

Surprise: Whatever you thought of “The Master” or “Django Unchained,” you have to admit Philip Seymour Hoffman and, to a slightly lesser extent, Christoph Waltz (in what really was a lead role) are phenomenal in the films. Let’s honor one of them.

BEST ACTRESS

Majority: It’s up in the air between Jennifer Lawrence (“Silver Linings Playbook”), Jessica Chastain (“Zero Dark Thirty”) and Emmanuelle Riva (“Amour”), the oldest-ever nominee at age 85.

Accurate? Absolutely. Naomi Watts (“The Impossible”) won’t win, and 9-year-old Quvenzhané Wallis, so good in “Beasts of the Southern Wild,” will have to wait until she hits double digits for her Oscar.

Surprise: I prefer Chastain doesn’t win and would be happy with a Lawrence victory. But I was especially impressed by Riva, who could be a way for voters to reward the Academy’s love for “Amour” with more than just nominations and a Best Foreign Language Film win.

Innovative Therapy for Tinnitus

It's estimated that one in 10 adults suffer from tinnitus, or persistent ringing in the ears. Tinnitus can have a significant effect on a person's quality of life, leading to depression, fatigue and memory problems. Many tinnitus sufferers become withdrawn from their friends and regular activities.

But now there's relief. The Mercy Tinnitus Center provides an innovative, non-invasive treatment. Personalized Tinnitus Adaptation Therapy, or PTAT, is a leading-edge therapy that retrains the brain to adapt to the tinnitus. Mercy is the only hospital in the Chicago area currently offering this effective treatment option. PTAT is customized to each patient and is more affordable than any other acoustic treatment available in the Greater Chicago Area.

TO LEARN MORE ABOUT PTAT AND THE MERCY TINNITUS CENTER, CALL 312.567.2002 OR VISIT MERCY-CHICAGO.ORG/TINNITUS

'Snitch'

'Snitch' a real snooze

If I know ruthless drug dealers (which I don't, but still), I really don't think you can just approach their operation and say you want in. When trust is paramount, a new face, particularly one attached to a body the size of human anvil Dwayne Johnson, is the opposite of credible.

Yet that's exactly what construction manager John Matthews (Johnson) does when he convinces vicious/gullible Missouri drug dealer Malik (Michael K. Williams of "The Wire") that he can help transport giant drug shipments. What Malik might have learned with a quick Google search—worth noting: earlier in the film John reads the Wikipedia page for "drug cartel"—is that John's 18-year-old son Jason (Rafi Gavron) faces at least 10 years in prison after being picked up for accepting a package from his drug dealer pal. Since the prosecutor (Susan Sarandon, sleeping) will reduce the sentence only if Jason snitches on bigger crooks, John combines his love for his son with his massive physique to do for the DEA in a matter of weeks what probably would take years in a real-life investigation.

It's safe to say Jason would be screwed if his dad were Steve Carell.

The 112-minute "Snitch" is "inspired by true events"—which means almost nothing. It's certainly no excuse for the film generally presenting characters' innocence as proportional to their whiteness or the story's shocking low energy, from its moody, strings-based score to its persistent lack of action.

Really, anyone who calls "Snitch" "action-packed" is flat-out lying. I think the movie actually made my heart beat slower.

From one of Johnson's vaguest performances to Barry Pepper playing a DEA agent (his goatee makes Jeff Bridges' "The Dude" look sophisticated), the acting in "Snitch" rarely rises above funny—which also is true of its presentation of the war on drugs. You're better off renting "The House I Live In," Eugene Jarecki's upsetting documentary about the ineffectiveness and inherent racial bias behind many drug penalties and minimum sentences.

Or, hey, see "Snitch," which shows the emotional impact of risky decisions but also suggests an average, determined dad can escape a mugging and near-carjacking with only a small nick on his head. Good advice!

In the (imaginary) low-budget movie-making handbook, there must be 10 chapters on stories about money-starved small towns and resourceful kids forced to confront their positions without a reliable parent for support.

The Illinois-set "Future Weather" falls smack in the middle of this indie subgenre, and it's neither a disposable piece of formula nor an engrossing tale that makes the most of its parts. Thirteen-year-old Lauduree (Perla Haney-Jardine) has turned out incredibly well considering her dad died when she was 2 and her irresponsible mom (Marin Ireland, who played "Upset visitor" in Steven Soderbergh's recent "Side Effects") takes off for California to be a makeup artist, leaving her daughter only a goodbye note and $50. A science fiend who prefers to work alone and wants to live alone, Lauduree would be happy—well, not happy, but fine—trying to support herself.

Of course, a teenager can't do that, and Lauduree's situation may affect the plans of her grandma (Amy Madigan), who wants to move to Florida and make her long-distance relationship with her boyfriend (William Sadler of "The Shawshank Redemption") short-distance.

Future Weather

It's tough to generate dramatic momentum around a 13-year-old researching carbon dioxide. Lauduree's friendship with nice new kid and fellow science fan Neel (Anubhav Jain) is sweet, but the coming-of-age moments barely fit into the bigger picture. The thematic notion of finding a safe environment for an endangered species (and child) also comes off as a stretch in the context of global warming and, as Lauduree claims, the notion of Florida possibly being underwater in 30 years.

In her science teacher (Lili Taylor of "High Fidelity"), Lauduree finds an advocate for her cause and hope that she's not the only one trying to keep her world, in the large and small sense, spinning properly. Well-acted but ultimately underwhelming, "Future Weather" skips a rock through a common story, but not without cracking the surface of children's need for help in a variety of pursuits.

The movie makes quite a grand promise by beginning with a voiceover proclaiming, "Why is there evil in the world? Let me start from the beginning." I mean, sheesh, this could be a long story. » Read the full review at redeyechicago.com.

Before the Oscar-nominated documentary "The Gatekeepers," members of Israel's secret service known as the Shin Bet had never given interviews. So why were they willing to participate in this film? Why is it now OK to give an inside look into former missions and the feelings of the former heads of the operation?

Director Dror Moreh's film does not answer these questions, nor does it do a particularly good job of providing context for the never-ending conflict between Israel and Palestine. Moreh relies primarily on the stories of, and his interviews with, six former heads of the Shin Bet.

This alternately provides fascinating accounts of ethical complexity, such as a case in which a rare attempt to consider collateral damage resulted in nearly all the targets surviving, and thinly sketched observations that require a lot more information about who these guys are, how they were chosen and what it was like to be in the organization.

The Gatekeepers

"The Gatekeepers" poses difficult questions about the luxury of a moral high ground against an enemy that delights in the creation of suffering, but it does not feel nearly as nuanced or well-researched as "Zero Dark Thirty." It's impossible not to respond to accounts of the Shin Bet trying to deter the orders of extremist rabbis or stories of inaccurate intelligence that leads to the deaths of innocents.

Yet the film is lacking enough in information that I couldn't help but look at one elderly former head of the Shin Bet and think, "People may have been scared of you then, but the only frightening thing about you now is the hair leaping out of your nose." It doesn't derail the movie or anything, but producers really should have demanded those weeds be cut before shooting.

On the poster for "Fourplay," R.E.M. singer Michael Stipe calls the sexual-awakening anthology "punitanical America's wake-up call ... it's hot, it's sexy, it's real."

There's no denying part of the country's discomfort about sexual issues, despite the prevalence of sexuality in the mainstream. Yet the quote might register more convincingly were Stipe not an executive producer of this four-part, 76-minute disaster, which sadly co-stars a few Chicagoans and is directed by Northwestern film professor Kyle Henry.

Setting varied and horribly written stories in major cities including Austin, Tampa, San Francisco and that major Chicago-area city Skokie (really), "Fourplay" begins with the local tale, for which Skokie should finalize its lawsuit ASAP. In that part a woman dog-sits for the woman she likes in the church choir; what happens aims for daring but is instead embarrassing and absurd. "Austin" left me wondering if am supposed to think a couple would enjoy conceiving a child in the back room of an adult video store, and "Tampa" uses the thin hook of a gay man's shyness as an excuse to depict a mini-gay porn of masturbation fantasies and a—if you get the idea already, stop reading now—tidal wave of (presumably fake) semen.

Fourplay

Only "San Francisco" actually has a degree of emotional involvement, even if it blends "The Diving Bell and the Butterfly" with "The Sessions." In it, a transvestite prostitute arrives to work with a man who can only communicate by blinking.

At no point does "Fourplay" provide a sense of place for its various locations or much sense of the accepted practices these behaviors defy.

It's easy to shout about the need for a wake-up call, and I'm all for open-minded discussions of complicated desires and other touchy subjects. I'm not sure the debate about the functions of a dog's tongue and a person's big toe, however, is in desperate need of a counterpoint.

OMG :)

NEW ON DVD

THIS WEEK'S TOP RELEASES

Argo

Ben Affleck completes his evolution from movie star to action director with this hit, a multi-award-winning and remarkably entertaining thriller based on actual events. Affleck plays Tony Mendez, the CIA agent who came up with a daring plan to extract a group of American Embassy staffers hiding in Iran during the 1979-81 hostage crisis. He pretended to be a location scout for a Canadian science-fiction epic. Though this is a true story, Affleck and screenwriter Chris Terrio fudge facts to make it more exciting, but given that "Argo" is partly about the allure of movie fakery, the changes aren't too egregious. Besides, it's hard to argue with the results: a frequently funny, genuinely pulse-pounding historical drama with a strong point of view about the similarities between Hollywood and global politics.

Extras: The DVD and Blu-ray add a commentary track and featurettes that fill in more of the real-life details. NOEL MURRAY, LOS ANGELES TIMES

Anna Karenina

Director Joe Wright's adaptation of Leo Tolstoy's work reunites him with Keira Knightley for a highly theatrical approach to a classic. Wright begins the tale of the adulterous Anna and her long-suffering husband, Alexi (Jude Law), on a stage, and throughout he lets the props look like props, while the actors dance around one another as though they're in a musical. In the process, Wright drains some of the emotion out of screenwriter Tom Stoppard's excellent adaptation, making the story feel more abstract. But while Wright's style gets in the way at times, he succeeds in pushing beyond the usually dry approach to literary adaptation, making something exciting and beautiful.

Extras: Wright contributes a commentary track to the DVD and Blu-ray, which also contain deleted scenes and extensive behind-the-scenes material.

NOEL MURRAY, LOS ANGELES TIMES

Sinister

There are three ways to generate scares in a horror film: smart writing, a creepy filming style or an interesting creature. The better these elements, the better the film. "Sinister" falls on all three counts. The closest thing to a scare is when director Scott Derrickson has the creature jump into a scene accompanied by a loud sound. Yes, it startles. But being startled and being scared are not the same.

Extras: deleted scenes, commentary tracks and featurettes. RICK BENTLEY, THE FRESNO BEE

Firecakes continues the gourmet doughnut craze

By Lisa Arnett, Kate Bernot and Jessica Cantarelli | REDEYE

No way around it: opening a gourmet doughnut shop fewer than five blocks from freakishly popular shop The Doughnut Vault in River North is a ballsy move.

But that's exactly what Jonathan Fox, a seasoned restaurateur who already has a foothold in the neighborhood with La Madia, did when he opened Firecakes (68 W. Hubbard St. 312-329-6500) earlier this month.

For what it's worth, any accusations of jumping on the designer doughnut wagon can be countered with the fact that Fox does have a legit family tie to the pastry: His wife's great-grandfather was a baker at a logging camp in northern Wisconsin, and Fox has drawn upon his doughnut recipe at Firecakes.

Unlike The Doughnut Vault, which closes up shop in the morning as soon as stock runs out, Firecakes has been staying open until between 2 and 4 p.m. daily (opening time is 7:30 a.m. weekdays and 8:30 a.m. weekends). The full lineup of doughnuts is 11 strong, and prices range from $2 for a diminutive pineapple-bacon nugget to $3 for the massive apple fritter. It's luck of the draw as to what will be available when you drop in. It took five visits, but we managed to get our doughnut-grubbing hands on one of each.

1 Apple fritter

This crispy behemoth has juicy little bits of apple hidden inside. I'll take five more, please. —L.A.

2 Lemon verbena meringue

Airy, light and delicious with the perfect amount of tanginess from the lemon curd and a delicate fluff of meringue. —J.C.

3 Honey glazed & Valrhona chocolate iced

These two are the biggest glazed doughnuts I've ever seen. You'll need a really big coffee to top 'em off. —L.A.

4 Chocolate hazelnut long john

Whoa. This. Is. Chocolatey. I really liked the dark chocolate coating, but I think the filling is a little too sweet; it tastes like pudding inside a doughnut. —K.B.

5 Triple Valrhona chocolate cake

Looking at this divine chocolatey masterpiece, one would expect the first bite to be a lot sweeter. Its perfectly crunchy outside is complemented by a fluffy chocolate inside, and I never want this taste to end. —J.C.

6 Raspberry and blood orange jelly

A jelly doughnut that uses real jelly? Finally! The jelly is a bit tart, which helps counter the powdered-sugar sweetness. Whether one prefers a powdered or granulated sugar coating on a jelly doughnut probably is a question as old as baking itself. —K.B.

7 Old fashioned buttermilk

This is my favorite, no question. Just the right balance of crunchy and cakey, with a touch of tang. —L.A.

8 Coconut cream

The coconut flavor tastes fruity and real, not suntan lotion-y fake. It's the perfect hybrid of coconut cream pie and a doughnut. —L.A.

9 Maple glazed pineapple and bacon

This one's just a wee bite compared with the monstrous size of the others. Every gourmet doughnut shop seems to be doing its own bacon doughnut, and thankfully, this one is surprisingly light with a satisfying salty-sweet finish. —L.A.

10 Butterscotch praline

Super-sweet caramel icing with a cool, milky custard filling. The praline crunch on top of the icing adds some flair to this delicious, doughy treat. —J.C.

LOVE IT!

Brownie points (doughnut points?) for wrapping the box with string so it's easy to carry.

Blushing bridal gowns

Jessica Biel, Anne Hathaway aren't only brides thinking pink these days

Chicago Tribune

Pink has entered into a committed relationship with wedding gowns.

Blushing bridal gowns marched down the aisle as far back as 2002—an eternity in the annals of celebrity marriage and fashion trends—when Gwen Stefani married Gavin Rossdale wearing a John Galiano for Christian Dior gown.

It wasn't particularly shocking for a free spirit like Stefani to add a shock of pink.

What is surprising is that blush-colored gowns, which can lean to pink, peach or taupe, have continued their march down the aisle. Last fall Jessica Biel wore a light pink Giambattista Valli Haute Couture gown to wed Justin Timberlake, and Anne Hathaway wore a custom Valentino gown with a pink train to marry Adam Shulman.

Beyond Hollywood, the reception was even warmer than David's Bridal anticipated when it featured a blush-colored gown from the White by Vera Wang collection on the cover of a catalog last season.

"Vera really wanted to get color into the line for David's. So we thought, we'll put it out there, but we're not sure if our customer is ready to accept that," said Dan Rentillo, vice president of design for David's Bridal. "It sold much better than we expected. Customers really responded, and it beat projections."

Blush and nude tones have become another neutral in apparel and accessories as a whole.

"When something is trending in fashion, it has a natural segue into bridal," Rentillo said.

Blush tones also suit a variety of silhouettes (from ball gowns to columns), settings (churches to beaches) and groomsmen's attire (black, gray, navy, chocolate brown, taupe).

Bridal designer Ines Di Santo included two blush-colored gowns, the Candide and the Liberta, in her spring/summer 2013 collection (inesdisanto.com).

"Pink provides the bride with a nontraditional option and an opportunity to work a color theme throughout the wedding," Di Santo said. "It's flattering to many skin tones and hair colors. Who doesn't look pretty in pink?"

Some bridal gowns pick up flickers of pink with embellishments. Blake Lively wore a Marchesa dress with rose-gold embroidery for her September wedding to Ryan Reynolds. BHLN, the bridal brand for Anthropologie, is carrying an exclusive Badgley Mischka "Cyprium" gown with rose-colored paillettes on a curve-hugging silhouette ($1,000).

Blushes, soft pinks and nudes are currently the most requested colors not only for bridesmaid gowns at BHLN's Chicago store (8 E. Walton St., 312-573-2573, bhldn.com), but also for brides who want a simple silhouette with a touch of whimsy. Store manager Faymi Winters cites BHLN's "Niceties" dress in blush ($350) as popular for both brides and bridesmaids.

"Don't be afraid to reverse the expectation," Winters suggested. "Try having your bridesmaids wear ivory or champagne tones while you are a bride in blush."

Thinking PINK

» DO pick a blush tone that flatters your complexion; blush can resemble a peachy-pink ballet slipper or carry an oyster or taupe cast, said BHLN's Faymi Winters. "Fair-skinned ladies tend to look best in cooler hues while those with a darker complexion can pull off warmer tones."

» DO think about the season. A pink bridal gown is a natural for spring and summer. But it can work in fall or winter when wines or plums are part of the wedding palette, Dan Rentillo of David's Bridal said.

» DON'T rule out bridal gown details such as illusion or sheer necklines, peplums around the waist and metallic trimming.

The ultimate in ultrabooks

CNET.com

Though “Ultrabook” is a trademarked Intel term, it is used more broadly for the now-popular class of thin notebooks without optical drives. If you’re not looking for a desktop replacement, just something sleek and light, open up an ultrabook.

Apple MacBook Air

The good: The 13-inch MacBook Air has new Intel CPUs, better battery life, an improved 720p webcam, and finally adds USB 3.0 ports while shaving $100 off the price of last year’s models.

The bad: The design, while strong, stays largely the same: There’s no Ethernet port, and the base SSD storage option of 128GB is smaller than a standard hard drive, though that’s common for ultrabooks.

The cost: $1,124-$1,199

The bottom line: This year’s MacBook Air opts for gradual improvements rather than anything revolutionary, but lowered prices continue to make it the go-to mainstream recommendation for any MacBook owner-to-be.

Lenovo IdeaPad Yoga 13

The good: The Lenovo IdeaPad Yoga 13 looks as good as any 13-inch ultrabook, with the added attraction of a 360-degree screen and a laptop body that can fold into a tent, stand or slate.

The bad: Tablet mode leaves the keyboard exposed, and the Yoga 13 costs more than standard ultrabooks with similar components.

The cost: $1,099-$1,213

The bottom line: The Lenovo IdeaPad Yoga 13 is a convertible touch screen laptop/tablet that, most importantly, doesn’t compromise the traditional laptop experience.

Acer Aspire S7-391-9886

The good: The Acer Aspire S7 is a premium-looking ultrabook, with great performance, strong battery life and a high-res touch screen.

The bad: The S7 is priced well beyond most other touch screen Windows 8 laptops. The touch pad is not as responsive as it should be.

The cost: $1,599-$1,649

The bottom line: One of the few standout products from the first wave of Windows 8 laptops, the Acer Aspire S7 proves that Apple does not have a monopoly on great design.

HP Envy Spectre XT

The good: Slim and lightweight, the HP Envy Spectre XT is portable, well-built and easy to use, with a great keyboard.

The bad: The design doesn’t stand out as much as the original Spectre’s did, and its battery life won’t get you through an entire day. From a premium product, we’d expect a higher screen resolution.

The cost: $999-$1,074

The bottom line: A high-end laptop at a mainstream price, the HP Envy Spectre XT gets much of the look and feel right, with only a few missteps.

THE RAZZIES ARE THIS WEEKEND'S SECOND-MOST-IMPORTANT MOVIE AWARDS

By Dana Moran | REDEYE

Remember that time Sandra Bullock gave a rousing acceptance speech? Or when Adam Sandler broke the record for number of wins? Or that Tyler Perry was nominated for his stirring drag performance as Madea? Wait ... huh? Oh yes, ladies and gentlemen, the 33rd annual Golden Raspberry Awards will be doled out Saturday, one night ahead of that other ceremony we can't quite remember the name of. Who will win these storied honors? We have a few predictions.

DAMORAN@TRIBUNE.COM | @REDEYEDANA

WORST SUPPORTING ACTRESS

- » Jessica Biel, "Playing for Keeps"/"Total Recall"
- » Brooklyn Decker, "Battleship"/"What to Expect When You're Expecting"
- » Ashley Greene, "The Twilight Saga: Breaking Dawn Part 2"
- » Jennifer Lopez, "What to Expect When You're Expecting"
- » Rihanna, "Battleship"

OUR PICK: JESSICA BIEL

This selection was based entirely on which star we're least afraid of facing in a catfight. Sure, JLo has an insurance policy out on her booty, but that doesn't mean she wants to cash it in.

WORST SUPPORTING ACTOR

- » David Hasselhoff, "Piranha 3DD"
- » Taylor Lautner, "The Twilight Saga: Breaking Dawn Part 2"
- » Liam Neeson, "Battleship"/"Wrath of the Titans"
- » Nick Swardson, "That's My Boy"
- » Vanilla Ice, "That's My Boy"

OUR PICK: DAVID HASSELHOFF

In lieu of a speech, the Hoff would like to present the video of his burger incident. If you haven't seen it, well, that's why the lord made YouTube.

WORST PICTURE

- » "Battleship"    » "That's My Boy"    » "A Thousand Words"
- » "The Oogieloves in the Big Balloon Adventure"
- » "The Twilight Saga: Breaking Dawn Part 2"

OUR PICK: "A THOUSAND WORDS"

Confession: We saw only one of these movies. No, we are not telling you which one. We were about to pick "Battleship" as the winner here, but the Eddie Murphy flick got 0 percent on rottentomatoes.com, and that's an achievement that really must be rewarded.

WORST SCREEN COUPLE

- » Any two cast members from "Jersey Shore" in "The Three Stooges"
- » Mackenzie Foy and Taylor Lautner in "The Twilight Saga: Breaking Dawn Part 2"
- » Robert Pattinson and Kristen Stewart in "The Twilight Saga: Breaking Dawn Part 2"

OUR PICK: "THE THREE STOOGES"

Because you know they'll actually show up. Snooki never misses an opportunity to put Lorenzo in a baby tuxedo. The first "Twilight" couple was TRULY horrifying though; they almost squeaked in with the win.

OUR PICK: THE THREE STOOGES

Because you know they'll actually show up. Snooki never misses an opportunity to put Lorenzo in a baby tuxedo. The first "Twilight" couple was TRULY horrifying though; they almost squeaked in with the win.

WORST PREQUEL, REMAKE, RIP- OFF OR SEQUEL

- » "Ghost Rider: Spirit of Vengeance"
- » "Piranha 3DD"
- » "Red Dawn"
- » "The Twilight Saga: Breaking Dawn Part 2"
- » "Madea's Witness Protection"

OUR PICK: "GHOST RIDER"

We gladly welcome any and every chance to smite Nicolas Cage.

Wiz Kid

Get the nursery ready: Amber Rose and Wiz Khalifa have a child! The proud parents made the announcement Thursday via Twitter, naturally. "Happy Birthday Sebastian 'The Bash' Taylor Thomaz!!! Everyone welcome this perfect young man into the world," he wrote. Yep, the little guy's already got a baller nickname.

HOT DATE MARCH 9

That's when Justin Timberlake will host and perform on "Saturday Night Live," billboard.com reports. AND THAT'S NOT ALL, YOU GUYS! From March 11-15, JT also will serve as the first weeklong featured guest on "Late Night With Jimmy Fallon."

Scary judge

"America's Got Talent" is trading a Brit for a Brit. Former Spice Girl Melanie Brown will join the judging panel this summer. NBC announced Thursday. Scary Spice will replace Sharon Osbourne, who quit the series.

THE DIGIT

$40,000

That's all it will cost you to roll like Snooki in a tricked-out 2011 Cadillac Escalade with, like, all custom everything. online.com reports. Is the former "Jersey Shore" diva letting go of her pink-and-black wheels for a more family-friendly ride?

This looks familiar

While Chris Brown and Rihanna are getting cozy again, "Law & Order: SVU" is reaching into their sordid history for the plot of Wednesday's episode. Or is the trailer for that episode referencing another hot young music couple torn apart by a high-profile assault case? Guess we'll never know. (But we know.)

"I don't want to hurt people's feelings, but I guess that's what we're required to do."
